Sociology and cultural anthropology provide the critical perspective needed for studying the social cultural arrangements in which people live, for understanding how societies function, for studying the conditions under which people change society, and for describing the modes and conditions of cooperation that make social life possible.

Courses in the program examine such areas as gender, race, class, globalization, cities, conflict, law and crime, multiculturalism and intercultural relations, technology and the environment, education, media, and the comparative interdisciplinary analyses of societies. Many courses are directly relevant to majors in other fields, including economics, political science, philosophy, literature, criminal justice, and business.

The major in sociology or cultural anthropology seeks to prepare students for careers in public or private service, including such fields as law, teaching, social work, administration or management, and research.

Transferring to the Major
Students transferring during the freshman year must meet college standards.

   1. Have completed three courses in anthropology or sociology with a grade of C or better.
   2. Have a cumulative GPA of at least 2.000.
   3. Meet the department’s criteria for admission and availability of space in the programs.

Academic Progression Standards
Same as college standards.
